2 Background

In terms of the Occupational Health and Safety Act No. 85 of 1993, employer must ensure a safe and healthy working environment. As a management tool, the employer is required by law to conduct various Occupational Hygiene Risk Assessments and Occupational Hygiene Surveys that will inform occupational medical surveillance programs in the work place to ensure that the workplace is safe and without risks. Should any deviations from the relevant Act and Regulations be identified, management need to implement control measures to mitigate the identified risk. Without the above-mentioned assessment, it becomes impossible to identify risks and management cannot intervene proactively. Without a proper occupational hygiene management system in place, health and safety programs become reactive and therefore resulting in illness, high medical and compensation costs.

The onus is on employer to ensure that the working environment is safe and without risks to the health of their employees. In order to accomplish this, employer must through the services of a competent person assess the exposure of their employees to hazardous environmental conditions in the workplace. Where the assessment indicates an ongoing risk from exposure, employer must ensure that exposure, compare the results with prescribed standards and implement the steps that are needed to comply with the provisions of the relevant regulations. This process which is known as monitoring must be performed or verified by an Approved/Accredited Inspection Authority.
